THE SECRETARISE SECTION OF THE SECTI The Times' Daily Short Story.

(Original.) When Irene Gurney recovered from her later life. Her husband and her self-then said: child were strangers to her. It was mended to her husband to place her in a sanitarium where she would be treated for her defect. She was taken to a retreat in the country and placed under the care of Dr. Downing Bowers, a specialist in such cases.

Mrs. Gurney was a beautiful woman, and there was nothing in the impairment of her memory to detract from her mental or physical charms. Dr. Bowers was a bachelor. He had constant access to her, and day by day, month by month, he felt himself yieldwas married. As her physician, he came a great power, absorbing his her dream stood before her. whole soul, he resolved to put his plan into practice. His patient had been told that she was a wife and a mother. He gave her to understand that a cure could be best effected by travel. He would leave his practice and take her away with him.

The spark of love for her physician had not entered Mrs. Gurney's breast. But she was delighted at the prospect of being released from her confinement and seeing the world. She believed him when he told her that he was her husband, but since a new marriage would satisfy any misgivings she might have in the matter she proposed that the nuptial knot be tied again. Perhaps there was something in the doctor's evident conflicting emotions that induced her to decline his proposition without taking this precaution.

The doctor consented, but it was some time before he began to make preparations for a wedding and their departure. He sbrank from the crime he was about to commit. But Satan, though he permits us to pause in criminal intent, sharply watches us to see that we do not forsake it. The doctor finally began to make certain preparations of which he alone need be cognizant. From these he haltingly took up others till at last he had everything in rendiness to secretly steal away with the woman he coveted.

One morning when he visited his patient he found her highly excited. "Oh, doctor!" she exclaimed. "Last night I went to bed with a headache and dreamed all night. I dreamed of be lives, no one knows. Trees That Form Islands. In the course of great rivers, islands are generally formed by the stranding of trees, shrubs, plants and such things brought down by the current. In the Mackenzle river of Canada the whole process of Island making in this way can be easily observed. Trees borne down flon of the current usually retain considerable mass of earth and stones entangled in their roots. They, therefore, readily sink, and by doing so form considerable shoals, which time converts. into regular vegetable islands. Then a thicket of small willows covers the newly formed land and their fibrous roots serve to bind the whole firmly together. A peaty soil is formed by the gradual decay of the vegetation, including the trunks of the trees, and on this many new varieties of plants spring up. Sometimes the Island clears Its moorings and floats away down stream until it is again arrested by an obstaele, or it may become in a sense waterlogged and subside close to the bottom, In this latter case it often gets covered over with mud and sand, which form a new and more permanent land surface above it.

Sharp, but Not Clever, A London scientist says that life in a metropolis makes young children sharp, but not clever; that it often destroys their chance of ever being clever, for it hastens the development of the brain unnaturally. It makes them superficial, alert, but not observant; excitable, but without one spark of enthusiasm. They are apt to grow blase, fickle, discontented. They see more things than the country bred child, but not such interesting things, and they do not properly see anything, for they have neither the time nor capacity to get at the root of all the bewildering objects that crowd themselves into their little

And who is the tall man looking at this childish ebullition eagerly, between hope and fear? Memory struggles for a moment like a bird endeavoring to escape from a cage, then one word sets it free.

She starts up, wondering, fearing. The poison instilled by her physician troubles, retards, her returning memory. She had not doubted that he was her husband, but this man she dimly remembered as such. Stepping forward, he took ber, a dazed expression on her face, to his arms, and father, mother and child were wrapped in one
